Working women face greater mental stress than men

VIJAYPURA, DENYS

The mental and physical health of working women attract greater importance in this fragile situation of Covid pandemic, opened Akka Mahadevi Women's University In-charge Vice-Chancellor, Dakargouda Kakade.

Speaking after inaugurating a one-day national level webinar on "Mental Health of Married Working Women & Quality of Life", sponsored by the National Women's Commission on Thursday, he said, married working women have the pressure of managing the work at home as well as at their workplace.

He stated that such a fact results in great mental and physical stress for working women.

Bengaluru NIMHANS Psychiatrist Prabha Chandra who was the resource person at the webinar said, married working women are facing a great mental and physical stress due to Covid pandemic.

She suggested some tips as to how stress can be managed. She said, whenever working women are in a state of confu-

... due to great mental stress they can contact the Tele helplines of the NIMHANS (The National Institute of Mental Health and Neuro Sciences). New Delhi-based Institute of Human Behaviour & Allied Sciences' Psychiatrist Jahansha Kaveri spoke on the occasion, explained the meanings of mental health and mental ill-health and how they have a gender-based impact on the health of persons. She opined that working women face greater mental stress than men.

"Intervention needed" Shivamogga, Ashok Pal Memorial College Principal Sandhya Kaveri who gave a talk on "Psycho-Social Intervention With Working Women", stressed the necessity of socio-psychic intervention for resolving the problems faced by working women.

Pune Bharati Vidyapeeth former dean B T Lawani also spoke.

More than 900 representatives from national and international educational bodies were benefited by the webinar.
